Overall comments on candidates' responses

I would ask the candidates to spend time reading the questions before starting, some are giving far too many answers which is wasting their time. When a question asks for four, give four, only the first four would be marked even if they are incorrect and the correct answers are given further down the list.

A few candidates used extra sheets of paper - very rarely was this indicated on the actual script and the markers were left guessing that there may be more information somewhere else in the paper. This needs to be cascaded to the centres as a major problem for marking. Can the centres please discourage candidates from using extra sheets but if they really need extra paper it should be clearly indicated to the marker by the candidate writing "continued on extra sheet".

Overall comments on the question paper

This paper covered the whole of the syllabus and gave candidates the chance to show their knowledge. Well done to all who sat this examination.
