Chapter 3 - Exercise your body

Arms

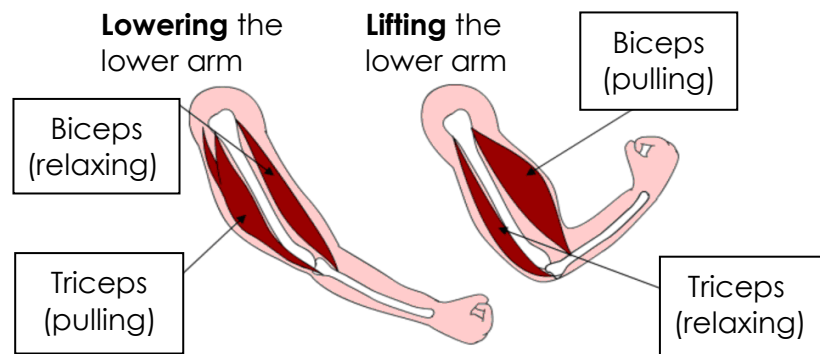

Fig 3a

Arms can bend, even though bones themselves cannot. This is because each arm has more than one bone and bends at the elbow joint where the bones meet.

A muscle is like an elastic band. Muscles pull the bones to move them but cannot push them. Each bone has two muscles attached to it. The biceps is the muscle that bends the lower arm and the triceps is the muscle that straightens it.

As one muscle pulls, it gets shorter, fatter and harder. This will cause the opposite one to relax. To know which is working, look at the muscle that is getting shorter.

You use your triceps to throw a ball, do a press-up or straighten your arm.

This is one exercise you can try.

Train your triceps

Fig 3b

1. Lie on a bench, bend your knees and position your feet flat on the floor.
2. With a weight in each hand, stretch your arms out over your head. Keep your hands close together and facing each other.
3. Bend your elbows and lower your arms to either side of your head.
4. Repeat this exercise 10 times.

Always warm up before you exercise. For the triceps, stretch your arms fully a few times before you start. If you don't, you could hurt a muscle. Also, don't forget to cool down after your workout.
